

ARTISTS' LITERARY SOCIETY MET BY CLUB

Browning Society Hears Local Authors and Composers in Own Work

Only the theorists are worried about Shakespeare. Most of the rest of humanity really enjoys him, as he talks a little about art and less about himself.

That is the opinion of Dr. Felix Schelling expressed in an address last night when authors, writers and musical composers of the city met at the meeting of the Browning Society in the New Century Club.

A memorial sonnet to Mrs. Florence Earle Coates and one to Browning were read by their friends. Mrs. Coates' sonnet was read by Mrs. Miriam Lee Early Lippincott, who also recited "Shakespeare on London Bridge," a poem by Henry Hauby Hay, president of the society.

Mrs. Lewis R. Dick was chairman of the meeting and presented those who took part in the program. Dr. Schelling introduced himself by saying: "This is a great moment for me, but not for you." He told of his own having achieved the position of being an official ballot counter at a society election and added that if any in the audience were "honest, persevering and industrious he might some day be elected teller of the Browning Club."

Dr. Schelling declared the pioneer of prohibition and the inventor of that literary type known as the essay by Dr. Richard Gunnerson. Gunnerson, also was said to have understood women better than any other writer.

The Rev. Robert Norwood announced that he "would neither preach nor take up a collection." He added that some one had said of him that if he could forget that he was a preacher he would write better poetry. He read two of his poems.

Songs by Philadelphia composers were sung by the Milton and the Philadelphia Song and instrumental groups. The songs were "Come Back to Me, Beloved," "Victory," the words by Mrs. Coates and the music by Philip George; "May Eve" by H. A. H. and the music by Mrs. Coates; "Robin, Little Robin," by Frances McCallin. A second group song by Miss Fann was of the English school in the modernist style. Dorothy Joline was the accompanist.

Dr. A. Edward Newton, who was to read his essay on Blake, was unable to be present.

Albert Coates conducts his first concert here. British Orchestral Leader Shows Originality and Lots of Spirit.

Albert Coates, leader of the London Symphony Orchestra, appeared at the Academy of Music last evening in the first of his appearances here as guest conductor of the New York Symphony Society. The program, which he offered was diversified, but not more so than Mr. Coates' conducting of it.

Plans for the new building, John Gabel, chairman of the Finance Committee, presented the proposition to make the initial appropriation at once. It was announced that there would be no drive for funds undertaken by the institute.

In celebration of its forty-fifth anniversary the Western Temporary Home and Day Nursery has opened a three-day bazaar at the West Philadelphia Club, 4105 Chestnut street. Luncheon and dinner will be served today, followed by a concert and card party. In addition to this there are numerous attractive booths offering fancy goods, toys, candy, ice cream and cake. Tomorrow afternoon there will be a children's party, and this will be followed by a dance at night to conclude the program.

There is a constantly increasing scope given by courts to measure for the public good," said Mr. Merrill. "Unquestionably the trend is in that direction. But it has been held again and again that there must be a real need for measures of this kind. They must be of benefit to all the people in a given area, or they are nothing but class legislation."

The speaker suggested that salient phrases of Magna Charta be printed in capital letters and pasted in the hats of all members of zoning commissions.

Physicians of St. Mary's Hospital admit themselves puzzled by the unusual case of Walter Schonski, thirty-two years old, of 122 Chenango street, who, since an attempt several days ago to end his life by inhaling gas, has become entirely paralyzed.

Schonski, who was found by police in a collection of men. It is a unique association. I know of no community which has shown the enterprise of Frankford for the support of its high school."

A short address was delivered by Prof. G. Alvin Snook, principal of the school, who told of the wonderful accomplishments of the Fathers' Association, and Mr. Tigert spoke on "Fatherhood."

The Fathers' Association of Frankford was organized ten years ago with thirteen members, when there were only 140 pupils in the high school. Today there are 1080 pupils in the new high school and in the Fathers' Association are 2300 members.
